Akihiko continued throwing rocks, grinning as the island moved back and forth. "Guys, hurry up and take the clear path, I'm going to run out of rocks!" He said in a teasing tone. He was serious though: He couldn't keep throwing rocks forever.

I'm not obsessive, I'm just a Loopy Lupine Lover.

Lapi stared at the lava - trying to think. What else could be going on here? I doubt it was that simple... She thought. She looked up at Saria. "Hm... That's a tough one... I guess, going along with the last part. If we did go the way that we wouldn't think of... There may be two different choices on a path. Like a fork in the road, they may both seem correct - but one holds something bad at the end. So... I suppose I'd make a maze that both required the player to think in order to get to the end... That doesn't really help us at this point, though..." She wondered, eyeing the many directions they could take.

She blinked in surprise when the maze started to unfold. The rocks actually worked. Her eyes looked at Akihiko, then to Bevelle - wondering if Lapi silently, in fact, start moving while Akihiko was throwing the rocks. Luna was stood next to Lapi silently - she was just confused by this room so say anything.

Althea spoke up well if I did make a maze and I didn't want anyone to get through it, then the way would be the last place you think.

But wait what if the one that made the maze already thought of the option that some one may think that way then which way would it be the obvious way?

As she saw the maze form, Bevelle took the opportunity to cross it before she couldn't see the path anymore.

The purple guardian put up her dress a bit and jump from stone to stone. "Man the walls are hot!" she yells, it was a slyer when it war her. It was a if she was beside the sun.

About 3/4 of the way through, one of the stones that she had stepped on triggered the fire ball and it was coming straight at her. Bevelle, terrified, ran as fast as she could and clunked on the other side. Her dress... Was on fire. The end of the frills had caught the fire ball as she ran out of the way. Quickly thinking, she stomped on the fire then collapsed on it, making sure not to roll inside the pit. The fire gave out.

Bevelle was ok, and her dress, though dirty, seemed to be fine. Save for a few cindered holes.

Anxiously, she ran towards the cavern. And the shard.

Ginger ran the clear path as quickly as possible, Thalia a few feet in front of her. Thalia definitely wanted the best seats for this Elemental. She was in the mood to pick a fight with someone, and the thought of doing it with someone who had a fiery temper was just better for her.

Spirit ducked into the pack, and so did Artemis, but he dragged Rain down with him. They all hated the flames.

Ginger and Thalia leaped onto the other side, waiting for the fire elemental to show herself.

Silently following, Ayu squeaked rather loudly when Bevelle's dress caught on fire. When she stamped it out her dress looked rather mistreated, and he wished the fireball hadn't appeared. Following her, he hoped the shard wasn't too far off and wouldn't involve any more near tragedies.

Althea called out worried about bevelle who just seem to just escape from danger root her on go bevelle go bevelle go bevelle go go go!!

But do be careful !!

Akihiko sighed and watched Bevelle as his stones ran out. "Go get it!" he cried, sheering her on the best he could. He wasn't sure if she could hear him, but he could still cheer her on regardless. He jumped off the island and onto safe land a second later. The moving island was making him queasy.

Glow crouched down, pressing her stomach against the floor. She wasn't liking this room as much now that she got a good look at it. This room scared her. She watched as the maze was revealed, trying to memorize it. She pricked her ears, watching Bevelle as the guardian went. She jumped to her paws, feeling panic wash through her when she saw Bevelle's dress catch fire. She sat down, relieved to see that Bevelle was alright. She looked at the islands, not totally sure if she wants to follow or not.

Inside the cave on top of some rubble there appeared to be a few bones followed by a shard on fire. Frowning, she eyed some of the others that had followed. "Theres no way I can touch that." She sat on the floor, hoping that they could find a way to take the shard. The cavern, though isolated, glowed with a red-orange ambience from the lava on the other side.

Ayu stared at the pretty fire shard. It was on fire, yes, but wow did it look pretty! He wandered a bit closer to it, wondering if perhaps the presence of something with no evil vengeful thoughts would help him to see it. Nothing happened though, and he backed off before he caught on fire too. Remembering the other elementals, he called out, "Hello? Is there a fire elemental here? Could you help us please?"

((It's time to see Ginger's powers of persuasion and will power control!!!!))

Ginger concentrated on the shard. She then averted her gaze to her hand. She willed it to cool off, whispering "Ice... Ice... Ice..."

As soon as the power happend, it had ended. Ginger's hand was inched in a block of dry ice, but she didn't feel a thing. She was able to move her hand onto the shard, grabbing it, and cooling it down.

She handed it to Bevelle carefully, making sure it was cool enough to touch. She was glad she was able to help. She sat down, and willed her hand to slip out of it's icy coffin.

Glow took a deep breath and leaped onto the first island. She didn't want to be left behind, and she wanted to see the fire elemental. Right now she was really thankful that she was a rabbit. It definitely helped her jump further. She raced over the islands as fast as she could. She stopped next to Bevelle, panting slightly. "How do we take it?" she asked when Bevelle sat down. She crept towards the shard hesitantly and reached a paw towards it. She let out a soft, surprised squeak and jumped back as it singed the fur on her paw. She ran back to Bevelle, hiding behind the guardian. She peeked out from behind Bevelle, her nose twitching slightly.

Lapi gasped a bit when she saw Bevelle's dress light on fire. She was even more shocked when Luna, yet again - grabbed her wrist. "Come on!" She grinned - both dragging, and helping Lapi across the isles. Lapi kept her eyes on the ceiling - watching for anyone fireballs. They finally reached the other side and left onto it - following Bevelle to where the shard lied. Luna stood right behind Bevelle, while Lapi, stood behind her and bent over - putting her hands on her knees. She stood back up and went to where she could see the flaming shard. "That looks... dangerous." She gulped. How did she would could they get it, like that? Luna looked at the group that was with Bevelle, then back to the shard.

Bevelles eyes grew wide as she saw what Ginger had done. "Thankyou, Ginger!" She turned to her, while giggling the shard. "Are you ok?" By the time she finished her sentence, the shard erupted into flames, and Bevelle drop it. She shook her hands quickly, then put them into Gingers, trying to warm her hands up and cool hers down.

"Unbelievable" she gasped in awe.

(second plot post to follow))

Althea thought to her self and out load said where is this fire elemental ever other room so far has had a elemental that helped us be able to grab the shard.

So she yelled out loud fire elemental where are you show your self!!!!

As Bevelle stared at the group, she noticed thatembers had caught a breeze and that the breeze was swirling around the stone.

She looked up to see the female elemental of fire, followed by Scott, her male counterpart and one of the twins from before. The twin leaned against the wall, again eyeing the group protectively. He finally managed to say "You are late!" before getting the look" from the female. Bending down, she looked right at Bevelle. "You go and find the shard. The cavern, don't go and misplace his trust." She winked before touching and solidifying the stone. Flames extinguished, it glowed amber and red, and had the look of see through ruby and fire opal combined, with golden facets and sparkles inside. It, like the shards before it, had a freeform but oblong point and jagged shape.

By the time she was able to turn, the female was gone; all that was heard was a crack from a rock that had broken off from the wall where Scott was on his way out, when he caught the glance of one of the guardians that he did not see earlier. Bevelles stomach turned. She had to think of something, now! Bevelle...froze. Nothing came to mind..

Ginger happily said, "Thankyou, that ice was cold..." Ginger looked around, seeing if the fire elemental had appeared. She saw an odd figure across the room with her back turned, so she called out, "Hello? Are you the fire elemental?"

Thalia, on the other hand, took the more direct (and rather rude) approach. "Yo, weirdo standing across the room, you seen the fire elemental? Or are we stuck in here forever with you as our help?" Thalia didn't care if she insulted somebody. She wanted out of that room, and fast. She had decided that picking a fight with the suicidal crazy who designed this room was probably a bad idea.

I might squeeze in 1 more post, then im going to end it here for tonight, but feel free to RP this out, just dont expect to get a response from Bevelle or Scott. Remember that we cant leave the room until we are done here^^

Glow licked her paw once. It didn't really hurt, but the smell of singed fur was bothering her nose. She looked up, ears pricked, as the fire elemental appeared. She was pretty too. Glow recognized Scott, but she didn't say anything to the two elementals. So they had three shards so far, one more and they could do...whatever they needed to do next. She got to her paws, standing up fully. She pricked her ears and looked around. Where to now? She wasn't sure where to go. She looked up at Bevelle, waiting for the guardian to lead the way.

OOC:Omg i love that girl *steals ^^

Lapi was both amazed and shocked when Bevelle did that to the shard. To see if the girl was buried into flames again - she became worried for Ginger. She was about to go see if the girl was alright when the fire elemental appeared - along with one of the twins from before. Lapi instantly froze. Luna stared in awe. This elemental was so cool. Though, when she saw Scott, still annoyed by the way he looked to Luna - she looked away from the elemental and focused on where the rock cracked and broke off. This must be our next path...

Althea notice the fire guy saying the new comer and said out loud .

May i help you with something ?

Do you have a problem?

Althea didnt care about upsetting him as she was trying to protect some one

((Hehehe, Fire elemental ish 'da bomb' as they say :D Maybe Thalia should pick a fight with her... It would be very interesting :D))

At Althea's response, Scott shifted his gaze. He found it odd that the girl had nerve enough to talk to him in that fashion. She should be lucky shes even here. But she was not apart of his concern. He focused on the ground beneath her feet and a plume of fire rose, then shifted his attention back onto the newcomer. The plume wasn't nearly enough to kill the girl, but enough to knock her off her feet if she wasn't agile enough. He didn't have reason to really hurt, unless she had ill intentions. And...his brother confirmed that it was the case.

Bevelle, eyes wide, flew right into Scotts arms. She wrapped her arms around him, hoping her innocence would show though. "Please! forgive them!" Her eyes were sincere.

((And...Scott will react to that tomorrow. Night!))

((ETA: You know why hes still there, right random? :D))

Althea just feeling the heat jumped out of the way and yelled out jerk!!!

She could not believe the lack of respect he had for another living creature and heated him for that.

She thought to her self if only shiva was here she would put him in his place.

((OOC: Um... I'm really sorry that I kind of fell off the face of the earth. I was hoping to catch up tonight, but my Mom kept taking to the hospital via ambulance about a half hour ago. Um, again, I'm really sorry. Maybe I'll post tonight, anyway, if I can. Love you guys. <-3))

Ooc: Ok read the last like 5 pages and caught myself up with the story can't believe I missed so much. I hope I'll be here in time fir the next one don't wanna miss any more :D

Love the water , ice and fire girls by the way there awesome!

At Bevelles lunge, Scott calmed down slightly. She was the great-child of a close friend of thiers that he thought had died in the battle long ago. And the only one he truly trusted out of the beings there. Her, he would gladly protect, and was her he hoped would weasel out any evil if there was any.

He put his arm around her back and refocused, trying to calm her down. He could feel that she had questions, and that she feared something. Looking down at her, Scott made sure to ask her if she wanted to know something before he left.

Startled, Bevelle began to think. She was relieved to see that he wasn't going to attack anyone, and that his shift had refocused. Her cheeks flushed red from his almost too-hot body temperature. Looking at the group, she had seen that some had gotten burnt, and it saddened her. Finally, she looked up into his eyes, and asked if he would provide clear passage out of this room.

At the request, Scott slightly shook his head and gave a tiny barely noticable smile. He was remembered. Always looking out for everyone else. Putting his hand on his head, he replied "Im putting my trust in you to do what you came her to do and nothing else. Dont misplace that trust." He stared at the lava pit. Still holding Bevelle, the fire elemental raised his free hand and closed his eyes, concentrating. Within seconds, the bright glow of the pit dimmed and the overall temperature of the room dropped to still hot but better then before. While the lava was still viscous, it was in a state where it would be safe to travel across.

((continue RPing here if you wish: the bottom part is for when they leave.))

Scott had watched the group pass the center of the room. Just as they were leaving, he eyed Althea. She had crossed the line with him and he was not going to allow someone so rude and encroacher to roam about his "home". Just as she was exiting the door, she froze and was unable to move. The group exited without realizing that she was missing. Scott, his anger still present but somewhat cool and with reason, stared at the girl. "Not you!" You have failed to realize where you are and I refuse to let you continue to roam about this temple. You will wait for the rest. Outside. And you will not find a way back into the temple." Scott fused himself with his twins powers, and faced the still-frozen Althea from where she stood to just outside where Kirah sat, healing the baby phoenix.

Before he phased out the room, he sealed up all the entrances with a fire-laden barrier. It was red-orange, swirling, and had a fiery glow to it. Beings could still pass in and out, but they needed to be approved by him, first. Those he chose not to let in would be denied access.

Kirah, still focusing on the bird, was kind of shocked to see the girl being phased in front of her. She raised her brow and wondered what she had done.

Ok guys, today is game day so I wont be able to continue this. Ive given you the option of RPing till you leave the room but please dont go further then that. I will see you tomorrow^^
