 Akhiko looked up at the sky, seeing the sun rising. He yawned, stilling it with the back of one hand. He sat up, and wiped a flower off his head. His long hair trailed tucked the ground, rustling the soft grass. He slowly got up to look around better, and almost fell back of food. He sighed and started walking, hoping to find some food before the sun was too high.

 Crow was shaken awake by Raven, who was laying her head down to rest. He grinned and stood up, stretching away the tiredness in his limbs. He sat back down and he bumbled slowly towards her movements. Raven quickly went to sleep, one hand laying across his back. He wagged his tail, looking around carefully to make sure nobody would harm her while she slept.

 Ginger slowly began to wake up, coming out of one of her futuristic dreams. It was about the river. She sensed something... wrong about it. She quickly opened her eyes, walked out of her tent and realized with a start that she had no idea where she was. "I'm instead of washing her face like normally when she woke up at the campsite, she inspected the water.

 "Hmmm" she thought outloud. Normally she would have woken up Spirit, but today was different. This was an important dream, and she could tell. "I should probably warn Bevelle about this..." "walks over to Bevelle"

 Saria was down by the edge of the waterfall, she had gotten up early as usual and had eaten a quick breakfast of various roots, berries and part of a fish that she had cooked yesterday. She had swam in the cold pool for a bit to wake up and her long hair was still dripping as she tied it up in a bun. Spirit was waiting for her, she quickly turned around, but seeing nothing, finished tying her cloak around her neck, picked up her sack that carried all of her belongings and set off walking down the river. Rain was curled up near the bottom of the hill near the river, up in the branches of a tree. She was sound asleep for the moment, but that was sure to not last long...

 As the warm rays of the morning sun rose to the tree tops, Bindy quickly fluttered from leaf to leaf. A sad but urgent fury of motion was beginning to ensue as cupped her tiny hands catching the morning dew before they struck the earth. Her snowflake friends had left her and passed from their former life into his new one. Bindy new she had to get them to the larger flowing stream (their family) so that they could visit her again in the winter.

 She tap a rippling berry allowing the little droplet of water to fall, shining in the sun like a little jewel. How fragile was their life, but how powerful they were together as a family. She caught her breath and kept flying...

 Maji woke and stretched as he slowly rose from his bed inside the small room of the cottage he owned deep into the woods with one of his oldest friends, Matthew "Chain" Kale. He sighed seeing the bed farthest to the wall was deserted and empty. He slowly shuffled his feet to the front door to see the morning sun slowly wake the world as it rose.

 ~ Sleepy all curled up like a cat - blinked her eyes at the sun rays peeking in from the windows of her bedroom. The bright light illuminated her sparkly white curls and gave her a blinding radiance in the contracted more 'dark' room she was sleeping in. She knew it was time to get up - things to do and things to see - people to see - you know the drill. Putting on her slippers, she stepped out of bed and opened the door. Not caring about wearing her jammies outside... she stretched and walked out a bit onto the wildflower covered fields near the front of her house.

 Bevelle smiled when she saw Ginger approach. She beckoned for her to join her, in admiring the day.

 Kaori stretched, and admired the sun as it rose into the blue sky. She brushed her hair lightly with her hair, resting against the bright light. She sat up and her bed creaked as she sat up. She looked at her critter companion, as well as her food supply. She nudged the deer softly then proceeded to eat some of the berries. As the deer woke and was partly awake, she took half of the berries and held it out to her. Here, these are really good ones. They're tasty." She took the deer quietly. The deer quickly grabbed them, then gave Kaori the signal that she was going to get water. "I'll follow you in a second." She petted Free lightly, then finished the berries.

 Ayu slowly blinked his eyes, not yet ready to wake up. The sun, amidst the shimmering sky, was shining directly at him, as if wanting the squirrel to awake. Grabbing her tail and so towards the ground with him, he set off to find a shaded area to rest. Several berry filled bushes lay ahead, and Ayu passed them without a second glance, his only thoughts of sleep. A cool wind passed through his grey and white fur, ruffling it slightly. Fronting, Ayu debated whether to pull on or stop and groom himself a bit. Pride of appearance won over, and he sat down pushing his fur back into place. It just seemed like another day, already ruining his sleep.

 Dawn was not a time that Roman appreciated. He only liked to see the sunrise if he'd stayed up that late, socializing with friends. But fortunately, he'd gone to bed at a somewhat reasonable hour on the night before the morning when the local wildlife woke him all too early. Some competition, maybe over food, or a mate, or a space, had produced some ugly noises, and Roman couldn't fall asleep even after it was settled. He hunched, sighed, and whined at his imaginary audience that dragged himself out of bed and tried to appreciate the color show outside his window. What was there to do so early? He'd hoped to sleep about it.

 Glow woke up with a yawn as the sun started to rise. She got up and stretched. She climbed out of her burrow, looking around and sniffing the air. She could hear the river a little ways away. She was hungry, but she decided to get a drink first. She went to the river, keeping her ears pricked. She started walking on her, though that wasn't likely to happen. She looked around for a moment, seeing someone a little ways away. She nodded slightly before getting a drink. The water felt a little chilly, but she liked it that way.

 Lunar Flare sat quietly on the top of a tall tree, looking down upon the steadily awakening valley. Her hair dance around her cheeks in the soft, crisp morning breeze. The night before had been a full moon, and although it hadn't been a blue moon, Lunar had still stayed up late to enjoy it. The night held many things that she enjoyed; darkness, silence, a severe lack of other people, and the calming light of the moon.

 Chain heaved a heavy sigh as he walked through the fields not paying an attention to where he was walking, he had no care in the world for he had just finished a night of haunting a few people with the wind in the dead of night. He yawned tired as stumbled over a young girl sleeping in the flowers and smiled. "Well, that is quite a surprise to see." He remarked to his self as he looked at her clothing and the little stuffed animal she embraced in her arms.

 Rain woke, yawning as she stretched and jumped down from the tree. She then began walking riskily across the meadow, looking for something to eat for breakfast. Soon she ended up nearing a house and she paused, thinking before turning around to see a purple bundle on the ground. Curious, she padded over to see a small human child with white hair (Sleepy) curled up on the grass. "Now what in the world is she doing sleeping outside?" Rain said as she stepped closer to the girl, sniffing her hand...

 Spirit woke up, startled by a resting owl's loud hooting. She went out looking for Ginger, finding her trying to convince Bevelle that she could use help picking berries. "Ginger?" Spirit called, "I'm going to go wake up Artemis. That cat sleeps like a rock! Surprising, seeing as we are in a tent that is laying on top of rough ground..." "walks into the tent to find Artemis, still asleep"

 Akhiko looked up at the girl, Lunar. "It's fine. I'm just hungry," he said smiling slightly, his fangs just barely showing. He yawned again, definitely a non-threatening gesture. "Also, the sun's coming up. That always makes me more tired," he added, pointing towards it. He looked back at Lunar, he loved to see her smile and life flowing through her blood. It mesmerized him.

 As Bevelle waited for Gingers response, a critter came from behind and greeted her. She, in response smiled warmly. The purple guardian needed to take back what she said earlier about others sleeping. She "you're quick to be jealous when she's wrong." questioned looking at critters and guardians alike

 "Well, umm... Bevelle? I had a dream that I can just faintly remember. It told me there was something going on with the river. I am afraid for the river, and if it dies off, we won't have any water supply. We need to stop the spreading problem fast."

 ~ Sleepy twitched a bit during her dreams. Tables of candy, cakes, and other sweets were right in front of her and she had to do was get up and reach for them to be able to have them. But for some reason in her dream she couldn't move! Flipping she realized her hands were tied up with red licorice ropes... ah ah! Pulling the ropes she broke free and flew head first into a huge chocolate cake.

 Bevelle, turning back to Ginger, frowned. "Oh dear, that would be horrible if it were to happen." She offered her hand for Ginger to sit by her as she attempted to try to calm the other guardian down. In the meantime, she took a look at the river and wondered.

 ETA: As she waited for Ginger to sit and calm down, she turned to see the critter behind her falling asleep. "Poor thing" She frowned as she attempted to pet him.

 Akhiko snapped out of his trance-like state and shook his head. "I know what you mean all right. I'm Akhiko by the way. What's your name?" he asked, still grinning. Though he was grinning, he looked sad, as if his heart had been broken. He looked back at Lunar. He could smell her blood even from here. "You smell good by the way," he told her.

 Kaori jumped up, and ran over to the doe. Free giggled and ran ahead, but Kaori was just as fast and began to tail her. As they approached a river they slowed down, and Free made her way to the bank, quickly climbed into a nearby tree to scan the valley, but instead she became distracted and started to admire the sun rising tree. She heard voices and other sounds below from somewhere down the river, and so she jumped down cat-like from the tree, partially starting Free. "Hey, I hear voices from down the river. Let's go see what it is, Free." Kaori told the critter. "Fine. Why do you desire to converse with others so?" Free rolled her eyes. "It's a great way to make friends. Maybe you should try to keep her fur and the budding grass around her. Her stomach growled and she grinned sheepishly to herself, the thought of food crossing her mind. I suppose I should go find myself so berries or bumboo... She thought absentmindedly. Darning in between the trees of the forest, Wishes emerged near the hills. She saw a few people and what looked like another critter near the top of it and grinned. She loved company! Running head long and care free up the massive expanse, her muscles contracted and worked away her dull sleepiness, her nails biting into the ground as she went, her mind giddy with the thought of new friends. "Hello there!" Wishes cheered brightly, a wide grin plastered across her lips. She stopped a little ways away from the new people, standing and letting her green tail droop to the ground slightly.

 Too early, Roman grumbled as he dozed, cranky, which wasn't his usual way at all. He decided that maybe getting some sun, soaking up the sunrise colors, might make him feel better; so he headed out hiking. It took a while for him to reach the nearby river, and, beary-eyed with lack of sleep, he knelt by the river's edge to splash cold water on his face. He hardly noticed that there were critters nearby, guardians up and about, at some distance where he could have seen if he'd been awake enough to pay attention.

 Chain coughed watching the little pajama dressed girl (Sleepy) and walked closer to her. He was quite curious of who this little girl would be and why she was sleeping normally in the middle of the flower meadows. "You're quite the animal loving person aren't you?" He questioned looking at the little girl. "Also just asking but why were you sleeping out here in the middle of the flowers?"

 Akhiko seemed to be suddenly more awake, and Lunar felt a little more comfortable. "My name's Lunar Flare, but I go by Lunar. Pleased to meet you, Akhiko." she said, a gentle smile adorning her cheeks. He was smiling too, but... he looked sad. Probably a remnant of his past. Then he mentioned that smelled nice. Lunar blushed, and proceeded to try hissing with her hair. "Oh-Thank you." she muttered quietly, not used to receiving compliments.
